In my view, interdisciplinary project-based learning (PBL) is some of the most important work we do in schools when it comes to preparing students for the real world, as life beyond the schoolhouse is a series of interdisciplinary projects that require us to use knowledge and skills from myriad areas to respond to challenges before us.

A Practical Guide to Interdisciplinary PBL Collaboration

Good listeners are valued but rare in our culture. I share this with students. I also tell them that people who really listen—make eye contact, offer empathy, refrain from cutting others off—are easy to like and respect. Save the Last Word for Me is a great activity that allows students to practice listening. Provide several rounds of this ...
